The widening access to higher education (HE) challenge is not a uniform one across England. NEON recognised this in its formation, and has delivered a series of regional supporting practice events since 2012 to support cross-sector dialogue on widening access practice.

This event will look at how this dialogue can be strengthened by the creation of a NEON supported community of practice in London and the South East. It will examine the specific challenges and opportunities in widening access to HE in London and the South East from the perspectives of HE, FE, schools, students and employers.

There will be case-study examples of how cross-sector collaboration works in practice in different parts of the region. There will also be a session looking at what the data tells us about HE participation in London and the South East and the state of the region.

The aim will be to pinpoint the key issues for widening access in London and the South East, and how the community of practice can help address these and what it actually means. This will include discussing what future NEON regional events should feature, the creation of an online collaborative space for practitioners in London and the South East and what this should look like and how the community can support engagement with policymakers from across sectors, in particular ensuring the new national widening access strategy meets the needs of learners in London and the South East.
